The Henry Ford
National Treasure and Cultural Resource

Welcome to The Henry Ford, America's greatest history destination!

Here you'll find hundreds of objects from The Henry Ford's Archive of American Innovation, providing an unprecedented window into America's traditions of resourcefulness, innovation and ingenuity.

Started by Henry Ford himself in 1929, it's the premier collection of its kind.

Our stories and artifacts from 300 years of America's history bring to life the accomplishments of ordinary and extraordinary individuals alike. A few national treasures not to be missed include Thomas Edison's Menlo Park Laboratory, the Wright Brothers Home and Cycle Shop, the Rosa Parks Bus and Buckminster Fuller's Dymaxion House — just to name a few.

And there's so much more.

We offer a continually expanding array of content online, a public charter high school and an Emmy® Award-winning weekly national television show, The Henry Ford's Innovation Nation with Mo Rocca (see Page 39).

In all we do, we bring together these great American stories to fuel a spirit of innovation and inspire a can-do culture.

So let your imagination run wild!

What will ignite your inner spark and awaken the dreamer and doer, the mover and maker, in you?

Dear Friends,

Once again, I am thrilled to present you with our annual Holiday Gift Guide. From the first page to the last, it is filled with distinctive and memorable gifts.

Obviously, many of my favorites are handcrafts created by our Greenfield Village artisans. But, in our continued support of the entrepreneurial spirit — locally as well as nationally — we've included many other amazing items. Take your time as you look through the catalog. I think you'll be surprised just how many wonderful and imaginative gifts you'll find.

President's Favorite
Urban Farm Collection

Inspired by early 20th-century pieces in our Archive of American Innovation, Urban Farm speaks to the evolution of pottery production through compelling contradictions. While the forms were inspired by the dawn of modern design and mass production, the pieces still bear the hand-thrown marks of their maker. We believe these pieces tell the story of pottery's transition from artisan to regional pottery to national-level factory production. Our simple matte glazes allow the clean, modern forms to shine while still preserving the soft, swirled impression of the potter's hands.

It's perfect, right down to the spectacular fireworks display that provides a dazzling finale to each and every evening. hand-crafted traditions

Innovation can be cozy!

Did you know the wrinkles on our Merino sheep were bred into them (more wrinkles = more wool). Pair that with the fact that it's the softest wool out there, and you will literally want to get your hands on it.

Greenfield Village tinware (facing page) is as functional as it is beautiful. These handmade pieces reflect improvements in process and technology that make them so affordable. Tinsmiths were entrepreneurs who took their work beyond their villages, peddling their wares and making their businesses regional.

cycling

What better example of ordinary people changing the world! The Wright brothers, two bicycle mechanics from Dayton, Ohio, did what people had dreamed of for centuries — powered themselves in flight. Their success reminds us what it still takes: creativity, collaboration, critical and cross-disciplinary thinking, and good ol' mechanical know-how.

Henry Ford created his motor car "for the great multitude" to enjoy hours of pleasure in "great open spaces." By the late 1930s, pottery production and people's tastes were changing. The established Bauer Pottery ceramics had to evolve to stay alive. As a result, it created some of the most fun, colorful pottery ever produced — designs that helped define the mid-20th-century modern movement.
