At the dawn of the 20th century, any automobile was a luxury purchase. But once the Model T made cars commonplace, “luxury car” took on a distinct meaning in the United States. By the boom years of the 1920s, a high-end automobile was the ultimate status symbol. Into the 1930s, the “Three Ps” – Packard, Peerless and Pierce-Arrow – stood at the top. The Detroit Three had upmarket brands like Cadillac, LaSalle and Lincoln, and upscale models like Chrysler’s Imperial. And in Indiana, E.L. Cord assembled a posh trio of his own with Auburn, Cord and Duesenberg. For 2022, Old Car Festival honors the great names in early American luxury – many gone, but none to be forgotten.
At the dawn of the 20th century, any automobile was a luxury purchase. But once the Model T made cars commonplace, “luxury car” took on a distinct meaning in the United States. By the boom years of the 1920s, a high-end automobile was the ultimate status symbol. Into the 1930s, the “Three Ps” – Packard, Peerless and Pierce-Arrow – stood at the top. The Detroit Three had upmarket brands like Cadillac, LaSalle and Lincoln, and upscale models like Chrysler’s Imperial. And in Indiana, E.L. Cord assembled a posh trio of his own with Auburn, Cord and Duesenberg. For 2022, Old Car Festival honors the great names in early American luxury – many gone, but none to be forgotten.

COVER OF "THE LINCOLN" MAGAZINE, APRIL 1924. FROM THE COLLECTIONS OF THE HENRY FORD. THF133174.